

Dragonflies use motion camouflage, a technique that makes their prey think they're stationary. They do this by positioning themselves between a fixed point and their prey, allowing them to quickly sneak up on them.